1. The following is a quotation of the second paragraph of 35 U.S.C. 112:

The specification shall conclude with one or more claims particularly pointing out and distinctly claiming the subject matter which the applicant regards as his invention.

2. Claim 21 is rejected under 35 U.S.C. 112, second paragraph, as being indefinite for failing to particularly point out and distinctly claim the subject matter which applicant regards as the invention. It is not clear how the bracketing is intended to further limit the claim. In this office action the claim is examined as if the brackets were absent.

3. The following is a quotation of the appropriate paragraphs of 35 U.S.C. 102 that form the basis for the rejections under this section made in this Office action:

A person shall be entitled to a patent unless –

(b) the invention was patented or described in a printed publication in this or a foreign country or in public use or on sale in this country, more than one year prior to the date of application for patent in the United States.

4. Claims 13-14, 20 and 22-24 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Lambert Jr et al. in view of Sigg (as set forth in the first office action). Note the comments of the prior examiner in the last office action and those herein responding to the remarks/response of the applicant.

5. Claims 6-20 and 22-24 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 102(b) as anticipated by or, in the alternative, under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as obvious over Leitch et al (4,570,389). Leitch is directed to a method of maintaining constant wheel sharpness that includes monitoring the wear of a grinding wheel in use as claimed. Note Figs 1-3 for example only, and the description of the same in the specification. Leitch expressly teaches measuring normal force, steady state horsepower or other process parameters to measure changes in wheel sharpness. The motor torque is considered by the examiner to be one such known process parameter. Alternatively the relationship of horsepower to torque is well known in the art, such that knowledge of one would allow an easy determination of the other mathematically (and measurement of one can therefore be considered indirect measurement of the other). Accordingly, it would have at least been obvious in view of the above teachings in Leitch, to measure torque in the practice of the Leitch invention, even if torque per se is not considered to be measured in the reference. Finally the limitation in the claims exemplified by the recitation on lines 10-12 of claim 20 does not appear to be the invention of the applicant.

While it is believed that the warning signal of the instant claims is disclosed in Leitch (note for example only claim 1 subpart (f), it would have been obvious to generate the claimed warning signal, in order to properly adjust the operating parameter in Leitch.

6. Applicant's arguments filed on 03/20/06 have been fully considered but they are not persuasive. The applicant's argument with regard to the applied Lambert reference is not that it does not teach measuring grinding forces including forces as claimed. Rather the applicant argues that Lambert relies on a separate force sensor to measure the relevant force. The problem with this argument as it relates to the outstanding rejection over Lambert is that at least the claims do not recite this feature. For example only, all that independent claim 20 requires as far as the force measurement is concerned is "measuring the force exerted by a wheel feed drive..." (Note claim 20 line 3). This appears to be precisely the force measured by the force sensor in Lambert. Additionally the elimination of the force measurement sensor as argued by applicant appears to be conventional as can be seen from the newly applied reference to Leitch et al., and other related art of record.
